PROF. MANU AMPIM
(historian & primary researcher)

Professor Manu Ampim is currently teaching a unique course on classical African civilizations in the Department of African American Studies at Merritt College (Oakland, CA), and is a full-time Professor of History at Contra Costa College (San Pablo, CA). He is also teaching a 7-Step Primary Research Methodology Course at Advancing The Research. He is the host of the popular international internet radio program, "Africana Studies," on the BlakeRadio.com network. Ampim has also collaborated on a NASA-sponsored research project, which examined the ancient climate and migration patterns in Africa.

He has taken work/study tours to Egypt and Central America since 1987. In addition, he has conducted an extensive 13-country research tour in 1989-1991 to all of the major museums, institutes and libraries throughout America, Europe and Canada, which house ancient Egyptian and Nubian artifacts. Throughout the 1990s, he completed several field research projects in Egypt and Nubia to continue his primary research at 42 archaeological sites to study ancient African social organization and spiritual culture, document modern forgeries, and to record the vanishing evidence of classical African civilizations in the Nile Valley. In 2007-2008, he continued his primary research and began pioneering field work in the Sudan to document the artifacts and evidence of the ancient Kushite civilization before the 4th Cataract region is flooded with the completion of the Merowe Dam.

Prof. Ampim's most influential work is his groundbreaking book, Modern Fraud, which is the documentation of the Ra-Hotep and Nofret statues in the Cairo Museum as among the greatest forgeries in the history of ancient Egyptian archaeology.
